the pink coated adorers who rushed for her stirrup. Striking the veranda table with her crop, she had called for a cup of milk, and drank it off at a draugn. Looking like a Primatticelo goddess, her slim figure and copper colored hair illuminated by the flaring sunset, she paused, laughing merrily, a creamy mustache on her upper lip. Suddenly grave, with a curt, imperious nod, she left the redcoats and entered the hotel, tapping her riding habit with her whip.

Three days later, after many a "Who is she? I must know her?" to his acquaintances Julien got himself introduced -not a difficult process—and joined the fair Russian's court.

Was she a Russian, after all, this intoxicating creature, who rode all day and waitzed all night? Yes, by her putative father, her mother's first husband, Count Babarine.

But everyone remarks and the bar of the corrage.

Bridal gown orange blossom trimmings are bought in sets, the favorite one being a garland, long enough to trim the left side of skirt, from belt to hem, with two bouquets, one of which finishes the garland at the bottom, the other trims one side of the corrage.

But everyone remembered that at the time of Oiga's birth her mother-the daughter, by the way, of a New York banker named Jacobson-was getting a divorce, prohably on account of her notorious liaison with a Northern Prince Royal, some Christian, or Oscar, or other. What was the nationality of a child brought up successively in a Scottish nursery, a Neapolitan convent, a Genevan pensionnat, who had slept half her nights on the cushions of the express, whose memory was a stereoscope in which revolved a series of watering places and winter resorts, whither her mother, hand-

The countess, in spite of period-al attacks of maternal devotion painfully ow-was gifted with one of the perfect, absolute spherical egotisms that never show a flow; when Olga at 8 .ad almost died of typhoid, Mme. Babarine, of the white hands-for the sake of decency sit-ting up with her child—did not once forget put on her gants gras. All this De Rhe learned after enlisting in the flying squadron that maneuvered about fair Olga. He began to love the strange girl who let him look straight into about fair Olga. He began to love the strange girl who let him look straight into her eyes, and who said to him, as she lits a pheresh cigarette, the day a friend presented him: "Ah! You are the man who is so much in love with me? How do you do?" giving him a hearty handshake, like a man. The sailor, true hearted fellow that he was, loved her the more as he grew to understand and pity her. For he was right, Olga was fantastic, ill brought up, but neither a firt nor a snob. Feeling, pethaps, the vanity of her life of pleasure, she judged, and that severely, her for hunting adorers and her cotilion partners. All desired her, none esteemed her—not one All desired her, none esteemed her—not one concentrate one's mind on the declensions of a dead language when one had just split had made her an offer of marriage. So she pulled them up short if they ventured to speak too close to her ear in the whiri of the waltz, or pressed too long the hand she held out to them en camarade.

Julien, sensitive and discerning, discovered the secret of high-heartedness of the "thoroughbred," as Olga was called. He loved her, too, for her beauty, of course; and his head would swim, when at a pause in the dance the auburn-haired goddess, with the black eyes and the tea rose skin, would lean on his arm and would intoxing the him with her starry saze and violet. would lean on his arm and would intoxicate him with her starry gaze and violet breath. But he loved her above all for her sufferings, so proudly hidden. How his heart ached when he caught the somber look Olga turned on her mother at afternoon tea, when Mme. Burbarine, seated with the light discreetly behind her, evoked her royal conquests in Northern courts.

He would marry her—snatch her out of this poisonous air, take her to his own saintly mother, show her a true family saintly mother, show her a true familysave her! He sometimes fancied Olga un-derstood his purpose; as she handed him his glass of Russian tea, he thought he how and then caught, deep in her eyes, a gentle light that seemed an answer to his renervan nity.

SHORT STORY

OF THE DAY.

THE LION'S CLAW.

An End-of-the-Century Love Story.

From the Argonaut.

Lieuteneant Julien De Rhe had returned in a sad state from his station; in Cochin China. Convalescent, after three months' filness at his mother's home in Touraine, lie shivered at the first wintry breath in the autumn air and was ordered by the doctor to Paun—"just what you want—mid, but bracing climate."

So in mid-November Julien sat at his sunny window in Hotel Garderes gazing at the Pyrenees and smoking a cigarette in honor of his recovery.

"My faith! Pau is full of pretty women, he said to himself the first time he was so fil, and that he thought he would only wear in his coffin.

Just the frame of mind for falling in love, wasn't if? Which the happy convalescent proceeded to do the first time he was so fil, and that he thought he would only wear in his coffin.

Miss Dorothea Klumpke, the young Amer-ican astronomer who is trying to convince the authorities in Paris that there is nothvolved a series of watering places and winter resorts, whither her mother, handsome still in spite of erysipelas, had carcied the ennui of a fading coquette along with her samovar and her pet monkeys? The odd girl used to say, laughingly at herself: "I am neither of London nor of Paris nor of Vienna nor of St. Petersburg-I'm of the table d'hote."

Had she any family? Haru, more so. Her real father, the Oscar or Christian, so often referred to by Mme. Babarine, had been dead some years, and the Russian count, her legal father, never bothered his head about her. Utterly bankrupt, a civilized Lenther Stocking, who won all the pixeon matches, his unerring gun gave him a living. The counters in solice for the authorities in Paris that there is nothing improper about the study of Venus, Saturn and the other celestial orbs as a branch of feminine learning, has been put at the head of the bureau of measurements, a newly created department of the photographic chart of the heavens and on a new stellar catalogue. She works six hours a day (or night), and is paid the modest compensation of $14 a month.

Persons who cannot eat heartily in the woman who enjoys neither coffee, tea nor chocolate before luncheon is an oddity.

Persons who cannot eat heartily in the morning are common enough, but the woman who enjoys neither coffee, tea nor chocolate before luncheon is an oddity. She has been making inquiries about her friends, and has come to the conclusion that originality and ingenuity are at a low ebb when suggestions for breakfast beverages are in demand. Alkathrepta, cocoa and broma, lime juice and water, lemonade, barley water and oatmeal water have been variously advised as a substitute for the barley water and oatmeal water have been variously advised as a substitute for the usual drinks that cheer the early breakfaster. Milk is out of the question, as the puzzled woman declares she would rather drink liquid quinine, and none of the other beverages appeal to her. At the present writing she feasts on baked apples and rolls, with draughts of apollinaris. But this is hardly a pleasant diet for a wintermorning.

The work is graded for a three years' course, in which proficiency is required for advancement, just as in other branches of school work. The first year's instruction is by demonstration lectures; the second year the pupils work after the methods of the public schools; the third year they have gained in skill, and prepare and serve complete meals.

have gained in skill, and prepare and serve complete meals.

Here is a sample dinner prepared by the advanced student: Cream of asparagus soup; balibut turbans, roast grouse, bread sauce, potatoes a la maitre d'hotel, spinach, orange sherbet, sponge cake. A supper served by this accomplished maiden might, if one were a favored guest, consist of scalloped oysters, chicken salao, fancy rolls, ice cream, angel cake and coffee. At each lesson two kinds of bread are made.

They were standing in the hotel writing room, near the open window, with its palpitating night sky.

"Good-by, then, and bon voyage," said Oiga, in her frank, firm voice. "But you must give me a little keepsake—that lion's claw you wear as a watchcharm—a trophy of an African lion hunt, didn't you tell me? It appeals to the fierce and free in me, you know."

Julien took off the charm and put it into the girl's fingers. Suddenly grasping her love you—you will be my wife?"
